Eric Slack Earns Certified Club Manager Designation

FAIRFIELD, Connecticut – DENEHY Club Thinking Partners (CTP) is pleased to announce that Eric Slack, CCM, PGA, Business Development Consultant, has earned the Certified Club Manager (CCM) designation from the Club Management Association of America (CMAA).

The CCM designation recognizes club management professionals who have demonstrated a significant commitment to education, industry involvement and continued professional development. Established in 1965, the designation is recognized by CMAA as the hallmark of professionalism in club management.

Earning the CCM requires completion of extensive educational and professional development requirements, including participation in CMAA's Business Management Institute programs and World Conference on Club Management, continued involvement at the chapter level, and successful completion of the CCM examination.

Slack brings more than 25 years of leadership experience across private clubs, golf operations, hospitality and residential community management. Throughout his career, he has focused on creating exceptional member experiences, developing high-performing teams and building strong relationships with members, boards, owners and industry professionals.

At CTP, Slack serves as a Business Development Consultant, working with club leaders, board members and hospitality executives to identify leadership, governance and organizational needs and connect them with the firm's executive search and consulting expertise.

“Earning the CCM designation has been an important professional goal for me,” said Slack. “The process reinforced how much there is to continually learn in club management and gave me an even broader perspective on the challenges and opportunities facing club leaders today. I’m proud to earn the designation and look forward to applying that knowledge in my work with CTP and the clubs we serve.”
